The surgical management of breast cancer is a fast-evolving field - Procedures, techniques and multidisciplinary decision-making has changed dramatically in the past 20 years. A gradual move towards surgical de-escalation has resulted in increasingly challenging questions regarding optimal treatment strategies resulting in a fine balance between over-aggressive treatment and under treatment.

This meeting is aimed mainly at breast surgeons and general surgeons, but would be relevant to all clinicians with a breast cancer practice. It will serve as an update meeting discussing controversies and recent developments in breast surgical oncology. CME points will be available.
